

Buses: There are about 3185 buses in Jinan. There are also 126 routes, three of them are electric buses, other buses use diesel oil. There are plenty of bus routes but not enough buses. The buses are always crowded. We should get some new buses that are air-conditioned and fast, also, it is better for our environment.

Cars: Although Jinan isn't a big city, there are still a lot of private cars in the city. Because of our fast development, it is now difficult to administer the private cars. There are little parking spaces for the large number of private cars. So now parking is a difficult in rush hour. We should try to make it easier for people to park their private cars.

Daily Transportation: Ben and I go to school by car. It is about 6 km from our home to school, about 30 minutes' ride. Phillip goes to school by bicycle. His home is nearer, and he rides his bicycle for 30 minutes everyday. Most of other students in our school go by bus; some of them also ride their bicycles.

Bicycles: It is interesting that foreign people sometimes call China the country of bicycles. As the cleanest means of transportation, bicycles are popular in China. It is cheap, and also easy. We find there are over a million bicycles in Jinan, which is amazing for most of the developed countries. We think people in other countries can try to use bicycles more - it is really a good way to keep the city clean.
